Rendleman and Livingston Pen Chapter in Book

Congratulations to Eliot Rendleman and Judith Livingston for their collaboratively written chapter, "The Dynamics of Collaboration and Hierarchy: Developing, Assessing, and Revising a First-Year Composition/Writing Center Partnership," in Writing Program and Writing Center Collaborations: Transcending Boundaries!, which is being published by Palgrave McMillan.

Dr. Seon Jeon Publishes, Presents and Wins Grant

K. Seon Jeon has been keeping busy:

- Her paper "Sorry! Apology strategies in ESL learners" has been accepted for publication in The Linguistic Association of Korea Journal this September.
- She will present her paper "Transitioning from Student to Teacher" at the Korean Associate of Teachers of English International Conference, Seoul, South Korea.
- And she has received an Interdisciplinary Initiative Grant from the Faculty Center for the Enhancement of Teaching and Learning for a teaching project with Dr. Shamim Khan of Computer Science. They are developing an honors class on computational linguistics for spring 2018.

Wilkerson Play Performed in Oregon

A new production of Scott Wilkerson's play Seven Dreams of Falling opens September 15 at the Collaborative Theatre Project in Oregon and runs through October 1.

The play is described as, "A comic re-telling of the Icarus myth. It's late in the post-modern day and Icarus has grown weary of falling out of the sky over and over again. Having decided it's time for a career change, he plots his escape from a cycle of doomed repetition even as family and friends find themselves struggling with the idea of letting go. Can Icarus simply fly out of his own life? And if he can, what does that mean for those he leaves behind: Daedalus, a father for whom rules, rituals and quantum mechanics are sacred; Theseus, a fading hero whose fame as a monster-slayer is a lie; Ariadne, the hero's former flame, the monster's half-sister and LGBTQIA cultural-critic; and the monster himself, The Minotaur, who holds a secret that could destroy them all...or set them free."
